PREFACE.

The Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in the City of New York, instituted March 17th, 1784, had its origin in Irish Officers connected with the armies of the American Revolution. Daniel McCormick, Esquire, was its founder and its president for many years. The objects of the Society were: (1) to assist poor and distressed natives, and descendents of natives of Ireland; and (2) to promote friendly, social feelings among its members.

With these laudable purposes as a foundation, on March 17, 1784 (the first St. Patrick's Day following the evacuation of New York by the British in November, 1783), the Society inaugurated its festive functions at "Capes' Tavern," the Delmonico's of that time. And in the Advertiser (a newspaper "published every Monday and Thursday; printed by Samuel Loudon, 5 Water Street, between Coffee House and Old Slip"), under date of March 18, 1784 the following appears:

"Yesterday, being the anniversary of St. Patrick, his "patriotic sons met at Cape's Tavern, where they gave an "elegant entertainment to his Excellency the Governor, Lieut.-
"Governor, Chancellor and a number of other respectable "gentlemen of this State. The day and evening were spent in "festivity and mirth, and a number of suitable toasts were "drank upon this joyful occasion. The greatest unanimity and
"conviviality pervaded this numerous and jovial company."

And thus commenced, (in the words of Curran),
"those happy meetings when the swelling heart conceived and communicated the pure and generous purpose, the innocent enjoyment of social mirth expanded into the nobler warmth of social virtue, and the horizon of the board became enlarged into the horizon of man."

From the inception of the Society, various regulations and by-laws have existed for its government, the last being adopted January 5th, 1832, at the Bank Coffee House in this city, the committee formulating those by-laws forcibly reiterating the objects of the Society in the following touching preamble:

"It is so natural for persons in reduced circumstances, or
"who may have fallen into misfortune or distress in a part of "the world remote from the place of their nativity, to apply for
"aid to those who are originally from the same country, that
"the expedient of National Associations, or Societies, readily
"suggested itself as a prompt and effectual means of affording
"the desired relief.

“It was for the purpose of assisting the poor and distressed natives of Ireland that ‘The Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick’ was organized.

“Various rules and regulations were adopted for the government of the Society, which were enlarged and altered from time to time, as circumstances and expediency required, always having in view the laudable and important object of relieving the deserving and distressed Irish.”

“In order to secure and perpetuate the advantages of this Society to the natives and descendents of natives of Ireland, and as connected with this, to promote good disposition and friendly feeling with each other, thus uniting the charitable and humane, with the friendly and social feelings, a further revision of the by-laws was lately thought necessary, &c.”

At a meeting of the Society held May 11th, 1893, a committee was appointed to examine the existing regulations and by-laws with a view to any amendment or addition that might be deemed necessary by reason of the changed conditions that may have arisen in the many years that had intervened. At a meeting of the Society, held at the Windsor Hotel, December 5th, 1894, Judge Morgan J. O'Brien, from that committee, reported a complete set of new by-laws for the future government of the Society, and (the requisite number of members being present) the same were unanimously adopted. A committee, consisting of Judge O'Brien and the Secretary, was then appointed with power to have these by-laws published in suitable form; and the Secretary was directed to add the Roll of Membership, a copy of the Charter of the Society, and such other interesting information as he may deem appropriate and proper.

The design of the badge worn by members of the Society, and which appears on the cover of this book, is a facsimile of the "reverse" of the medal worn by the members of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in Philadelphia in 1771. The following in reference to that medal is from Haverty's American Almanac:

Each member was required to furnish himself with a gold medal of the value of three guineas, agreeably to the following description: On the right, HIBERNIA; on the left, AMERICA; in the center, LIBERTY joining the hands of HIBERNIA and AMERICA, represented by the usual figures of a female supported by a harp, for HIBERNIA; an Indian with his quiver on his back and his bow slung, for AMERICA; underneath, UNITE. On the reverse, ST. PATRICK trampling on a snake, a cross in his hand, dressed in pontificalibus, the motto, "HIER."

These devices, designed some years before the Revolution, were certainly ominous, if not prophetic. The Goddess of LIBERTY joining the hands of HIBERNIA and AMERICA, with the superscription "UNITE," was sufficiently significant, considering that the effect of that union powerfully promoted the subsequent dismemberment of the British Empire and the liberty and independence of America. The motto HIER, or, without the aspirate, IER, in the Celtic language signifies "West," and from it came the name of the country, Ere, Erin, or Ireland, and Ierna, aspirated Hibernia. But the word HIER had in it a duplicate and equivocal signification, peculiarly appropriate as the motto of a society whose object was to "Unite" in fellowship the sons of the little isle of the "West" with those of the great continent of the "West." This medal the members were obliged to wear at the meeting of the Society under the penalty of 7s. 6d. for neglect to do so on St. Patrick's day, and 5s. on the days of the quarterly meetings.

The original records of the Society previous to 1836, which were in the possession of its then Secretary, are not in existence—otherwise much additional information could have been incorporated herein. They were destroyed by fire in August, 1835. All extracts quoted, however, relating to a period subsequent to that time are authentic; and those referring to the preceding period are the result of careful research into contemporaneous documents and records.

It is to the recently awakened interest of the members in the Society, owing to the zeal of its present president, that the publication of this volume is due. The intention of the members is to hand down unimpaired to their successors the heritage committed to their care; to knit more closely together, by a knowledge of its past, the humane and social objects of the Society; and to record their appreciation of those who through so many generations kept aglow the fire of love of the land of birth as well as love of the land of home.

BARTHOLOMEW MOYNAHAN,
Secretary.

*Extract from a speech, by Hon. Charles P. Daly, ex-president of the Society, in response to the toast—
“The day we celebrate,” at the 105th Annual Dinner, March 17th, 1889.*

“Gentlemen, I am not asked upon this occasion to go over my long recollections of half a century in the celebration of this day by this Society, but in an Irish way to go farther. I am asked by the Committee of Arrangements, this being the centennial year of the beginning of the general Government of the United States in this city, when George Washington was inaugurated President of the United States, and the first Congress sat here, whether I knew anything about the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in that year; who then composed the Society, and whether they celebrated Saint Patrick’s Day in that year or not. Fortunately I am able to do so, and with it I will conclude my remarks.

You know, Mr. President, and some of the older members of the Society, that all its records were destroyed at the great fire of New York in 1836;

but during the long period of my life, I have been able to gather many things connected with its early history, and to get something respecting the very year inquired about.

The late Mr. Henry E. Pierrepont, some years ago, showed me a manuscript of his maternal grandfather, who, a hundred years ago, in 1789, was the President of the Society, containing the regulations which he made for the dinner on the 17th of March in that year, at the Merchants' Coffee House in this city ; the guests that were there, the toasts that were drunk, and the names of some of the members of the Society who were present ; so that, fortunately, I am enabled from that document to tell you who the Friendly Sons of Saint Patrick were on that night, one hundred years ago.

The President of the Society that year, gentlemen, was William Constable. He was a native of Dublin, was an aid-de-camp to General Lafayette during the Revolution, and a friend of Washington, for whom the full length portrait of Washington by Stuart, now known as the "Pierrepont Washington" was painted. Before the Revolution he was a merchant in Philadelphia. He entered the city of New York with the American troops on the twenty-fifth of November, 1783, upon its evacuation by the British. The city was then in a deplorable condition. A large portion on the west side had been entirely destroyed by fire, and the city had been so neglected and ill used by the British, during their occupation of it, that it presented anything but an attractive appearance. Mr. Constable quietly walked over it, went down to the old Fort which stood then on the site of the present Battery, and when he saw the magnificent Bay and the great commercial advantages of its position, he expressed the opinion that this would be the future great city of America, and in accordance with that conviction, he removed his mercantile house from Philadelphia, and established in New York what was long known thereafter as the great commercial house of Constable & Co. At this day, you may think that there was nothing remarkable in this commercial insight upon his part ; but such was not the impression at the time. The prevailing opinion was that Philadelphia was to be the great future city. It was then a finer one than New York, had a larger population, and the conviction was, therefore, as I have said, very general that it was to be the principal city of the country. The question was somewhat discussed at the time, and one sapient gentleman—I don't think he was an Irishman—said that he had fully considered the subject, and that he was unable to make up his mind, because both cities in the future would be rivals for the trade of New Jersey.

I have in my hand a copy that I made of Mr. Constable's manuscript, in which he put down the names of those who were to sit on his right and on his left, and when I have read the names you will see that our old Irish Society stood in the popular estimation of that day, as well as it does now or as ever. On his right was General George Clinton, then the Governor of the State of New York, and the son of an Irishman. Next to him sat General Knox, that favorite soldier and companion of Washington, who, you will remember, when Washington took farewell of all his officers in the city, was the first to advance towards his commander, and, falling upon his shoulder wept. Next followed Baron Steuben, the officer of Frederick the Great, who volunteered in the American struggle, and who was so efficient in the military instruction of our army. Then came John Jay, the first Chief Justice of the United States, and General Irwin. General Matthew Irwin may not be recalled by all present. He was an Irishman, who, like Constable, had been a merchant in Philadelphia, and like him entered the American army at the breaking out of the Revolution. He was one of the most active in raising the funds, contributed by sixty citizens of Philadelphia, for the relief of the American army at Valley Forge at the time of its great destitution ; he himself contributing five thousand pounds, a very large sum at that time. The other guests were as follows : Chief Justice Morris, then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court : Robert Morris, the great financier of the Revolution ; the Rev. John C. Kuntz, one of the popular ministers of that day ; Theophylact Bache, long a leading merchant of New York, whose brother Richard married Sarah, the only daughter of Benjamin Franklin. Robert Lenox, the father of the gentleman who gave the library of that name to this city. James Duane, the son of an Irishman, and then Mayor of the city ; Judge John Sloss Hobart, then a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, afterwards Judge of the District Court of the United States ; Col. Richard Varick, Recorder of the city ; David Grim, President of the German Society ; William Maxwell, Vice-President of the St. Andrew's Society, and Joshua Waddington, William Seaton, Christian W. Wilmerding, leading merchants of the city, and John Wilkes, President of the Bank of New York. These were the names that appear on Mr. Constable's list as the honored guests who were present at the Society's dinner on the 17th of March, 1789. I read further from his memorandum, he says : " The following gentlemen will act as ushers for the day, introducing the strangers to the city, and officers of the different societies, and also attending to the placing of the gentlemen." The names given are

Mr. Boyle, Mr. George Pollock, Mr. Bradford, all prominent and distinguished merchants of that time, and Dr. Gibson. And then follows a further direction: 'Mr. Thomas Roach, as Senior Councillor, will take the head of the side table, and aided by Mr. John Shaw, Mr. H. Smith and Captain Barnwell, will superintend at the different tables "to give the toasts and pass the bottles."' (Laughter.)

Well, gentlemen, it would take too much time upon an occasion like this to give at any length an account of the members of the Society who were present; but I will refer to a few, some of them founders of the leading families of New York. An eminent member of the Society was Daniel McCormick, who for many years was its President, and during the colonial period was a member of the older Society, the Friendly Brothers of St. Patrick. I remember him in my youth, sitting on his stoop, in Wall Street, when Wall Street had more private residences than places of business, watching the gentlemen that passed by, to select from them those whom he would each day invite to dinner. (Laughter.)

Another member was Hugh Gaine. To those who are acquainted with the early history of New York his name will be familiar in connection with books, pamphlets, broadsides and other publications, bearing the imprint of his name as publisher, and of the many, familiar with that name, very few, I apprehend, have known that he was an Irishman. He came to the colony of New York before the middle of the last century, and established in the city, in 1750, its principal newspaper, known as Gaine's Mercury, which he conducted until the breaking out of the Revolution, and before that event he kept the principal bookstore of the city, at the sign of the Bible and Crown, in Hanover Square. He was one of those careful North of Ireland Irishmen, who did not feel altogether certain what might be the result of the contest ; so, at the breaking out of the war, he quietly moved his printing press to Newark, but after the battle of Long Island, and when the English had got possession of the city of New York, he quietly returned to the city and resumed his business under his old sign of the Bible and Crown, and when Washington, with his troops, entered New York he, in his crisp way, gave in his adhesion to the new state of things, by taking down the Crown and leaving up the Bible. (Laughter.) He was the Treasurer of the Society for a great many years, and died in 1812, leaving behind him a large property. Three other prominent members were Alexander Macomb, who was the father of General Macomb, who preceded General Scott as the Commander-in-Chief of the American Army, and William Edgar and John McVicker. These three men came here some years before the Revolution, and began as fur traders, that industry in which John Jacob Astor laid the foundation of his great fortune, and each of them acquired in that business a large fortune, and were at that time, 1789, among the principal persons in New York. Macomb's name is still preserved in the Macomb's Dam Bridge. In 1786 he built the largest and most elegant private residence that had then been built in the city. Washington occupied it as the Presidential residence until the Government was removed to Philadelphia. The house will be within the recollection of some of the gentlemen present, as the hotel on the lower part of Broadway, below Wall Street, long known as the Bunker Mansion House.

Another person whose name I ought to mention was Dominick Lynch. He was a lineal descendant of the famous Mayor of Galway, of that name, called "The Brutus of Ireland," who presided at the trial and conviction of his own son for a capital offense, and who was executed. Mr. Lynch came here from Bruges, in Flanders, in 1783, and established a great mercantile house in the city, that was continued for more than half a century. He is especially to be remembered by the Catholic portion of the community as the man who, chiefly from his own means, built the first Catholic Church in this city, Saint Peter's Church in Barclay Street.

If I am not trespassing too much on your time, I will mention another distinguished person, comparatively little known, and by few known to have been an Irishman. This was Christopher Colles. He came here before the Revolution, and was the first to suggest that New York should be supplied with fresh and wholesome water, and may, therefore, be regarded as the pioneer of the Croton Aqueduct. He undertook to build a reservoir for that purpose in 1774, but his efforts were frustrated by the breaking out of the war. He entered the army on the American side, and was made, by General Washington, Superintendent of Ordnance. He is especially worthy of remembrance from the fact that he was the first that conceived the idea of uniting the waters of the Hudson with the waters of Lake Erie. The first man to suggest the Erie Canal. He sent a memorial to the Legislature of the State of New York in 1786, laying out the route for the Canal, giving the general plan and some estimate of the expense, but his project was considered as visionary. It was, however, revived four or five years afterwards, and finally, in 1810, Dewitt Clinton took it up and brought it to a successful termination. I am happy to say, as one of the advantages of age, that I witnessed the celebration in this city in 1826.

in honor of the completion of that great public work—and which I remember as the most beautiful and effective public display that I have ever seen in this city; one of the most vivid remembrances of which is the noble figure of Clinton riding in an open barouche in the midst of the procession as it moved up Broadway, bowing in response to the cheers of the enthusiastic crowds.

And there was also of the Society, Charles Thomson, the Secretary of the Continental Congress, and of every Congress from 1774 to 1789, who came from Londonderry, and who, it has been said, was the life of the Continental Congress, and a man of such integrity and truthfulness that it was then a common saying that a thing was as true as if Charles Thomson said it. * * *
